(LOS ANGELES – Jan. 25, 2016)
- William Forsythe, award-winning choreographer and faculty member at the USC Glorya Kaufman School of Dance, talks about his approach to teaching, and the excitement of watching students develop their own artistic path.

"Getting people there. That's the thing. Seeing people have little successes every day," says Forsythe. "When I teach at Kaufman, I do not teach any differently than when I teach for professionals."

Forsythe's wide range of projects includes installations, films, and web-based knowledge creation. He is renowned for directing the Ballet Frankfurt for 20 years and for developing new approaches to dance documentation, research and education.

Forsythe teaches improvisation, composition and ballet courses at USC Kaufman.
